Built in 1943 of "Mobilization," "Semi-Permanent" construction, this is one of the largest of the 2600 series buildings. Containing 6580 square feet, the building cost $12,000 to erect. Due to changes in use and additional improvements made as a result, the value of the building costs increased to nearly $20,000 by the end of 1955.

Measuring 37 feet by 161 feet, this rectangular building has a concrete slab foundation, wood frame superstructure and a shingled, gable roof. It is clad in horizontal wood siding and has 6/6 windows and wood paneled doors. Across the ridge are six attic vents. At the south end is a small addition with a shed roof. Other changes include a garage door in the east elevation.

The interior plan consists of a long, open room four-fifths of the length of the building, with four small rooms at one end. The interior was appointed with restrooms, a walk-in refrigerator, kitchen, fountain plus heaters, compressors and lights. Clearly, food preparation was an early function in this building.

Building 2627 appears to be in good structural condition.
